

INDIAN OPERETTA TO BE GIVEN BY PUPILS

Real Redskin Life, With Weird Music, Will Be Depicted This Evening.

Did you know that an Indian maid never wears feathers in her hair? Do you know that the adjustment of a wampum belt is quite as technical a matter as affixing a life preserver?

The pupils, from the first grade up, at the Grover Cleveland School know all this, and much more about the Indians. They did not get it from James Fenimore Cooper, either, but directly from ethnologists who have studied Indian life and customs. Among those who have imparted such information are authorities like James Mooney and John N. B. Hewitt, ethnologists of the Smithsonian, and Francis La Flesche, son of a former head chief of the Omaha tribe, now employed by the Government as an expert on Indian affairs.

Will Give Operetta. All this study was made in preparation for the Indian operetta, "The Feast of the Red Corn," which they will present this evening at the school, Eighth and T streets northwest, for the benefit of the school playground. All those taking part in the entertainment are members of the Margaret Wilson Social Center of the Grover Cleveland School.

Even the music is to be the weird, melodic fragments of tribal hymns, lately brought to light by Indian students, and transposed to the white man's scale. Indian words, taught the children by the Indian experts, will be used. Every vestige of scenery and costume, every act and gesture, will be in strict keeping with the picture of Indian life the pupils wish to present.

Constructed By Pupils.

But the part of which many of the participants are most proud is that all the baskets, woven articles, wampum belts, and other "property" for the piece were made by the pupils themselves in their industrial work. The costumes, in imitation of those of the Sioux tribe, were fashioned by the girls, and the curious implements of cooking, and the meager furnishings of their wigwams were furnished by the boys.

The operetta is by Miss Bliss, but it was rearranged by the Misses Cecil B. Norton and Edna Carr, who are directing the work. The stage manager is Mrs. Freddie Schooley, who taught Indians in Arizona. Miss Anna McCouch and Mrs. Amy Ormsby have been directing rehearsals.

Prof. Dana Dropped By Minnesota University

MANCHESTER, Mass., July 30.—Edmund T. Dana, grandson of the poet Longfellow, announced that he had been dismissed from his position as assistant professor of philosophy at the University of Minnesota.

The action was taken by the faculty, according to a letter received by Mr. Dana from the college of the college of science, literature and art, because of his lack of regard for common usage and lack of discretion necessary for a teacher in publicly discussing the suicide by drowning of his wife, Jessie Holiday Dana, at Nantucket, six weeks ago.

Dana said he had no protest to make against his dismissal.

Police Taught How To Rescue Drowning Men

Red Cross Representative Longfellow Gives Demonstration at Bathing Beach, Following Lesson in Life-Saving on the Potomac.

How a little active and properly directed prevention can develop into a disaster more of the drownings resulting from water sports, was demonstrated to the police captains and lieutenants and certain patrolmen at the bathing beach today by Wilbert Longfellow, of the American Red Cross.

Mr. Longfellow has been teaching Washingtonians how to behave in the water to prevent accidents and how to behave after accidents have happened—all of which is part of the Red Cross campaign. Mr. Longfellow is the special delegate of the Red Cross to the country-at-large, and he has been making a tour of the principal cities for the last two years.

Companioned by O. P. Newman, Assistant Commissioner of the Police, Major Pullman, Major Robert Patterson, U. S. A., representing the Red Cross, Secretary of the Police, and others, he was accompanied by a large delegation of sergeants and patrolmen, together with William F. Glue, of the Chamber of Commerce, and as many representatives of the public at large as could be accommodated at the bathing beach.

The main purpose of the gathering was to demonstrate the simplicity of the safety first principles as applied to water sports. To assist him, Mr. Longfellow had Prof. Fred Bruner, one of Washington's most expert swimming instructors, the life guards at the bathing beach, and a corps of young men, and women who have been under instruction but two or three days. The various methods of saving drowning persons were demonstrated by all parties and the tests for life savers under the Red Cross regulations were explained. Explanation was also made that every one of the persons who assisted in the exhibition—though none had been under instruction more than a week, had successfully passed all the tests.

The most interesting test demonstration was that given by one of the young women who dove into the basin dressed in a light summer costume and wearing her shoes, and within three minutes had relieved herself of her superfluous clothing and was swimming about as though it had cost her no effort at all. At the conclusion of the explanation of these tests Mr. Longfellow gathered a class of new members of the police force about him and gave them each instruction in the various methods of rescue and resuscitation that had been demonstrated.

The methods are so simple and so easily applied that the police recruits quickly caught the idea, and within a few minutes gave excellent demonstrations of the death of Major Pullman to have all the new members of the force qualify in swimming if possible. To this end Major Patterson, of the Red Cross, has asked in detail Mr. Longfellow to start instruction. Prof. Bruner, who is an expert instructor as well as an expert swimmer and a member of the harbor police section, will probably be utilized for instruction work by the department head.

Common sense and a very little bit of skill which anyone is capable of developing are the fundamental principles of the Red Cross lessons. The lecturer gave the police this morning was really a continuation of a demonstration which began yesterday at one of the canoe camps on the upper Potomac, when he showed how two men could be saved from drowning and towed to safety by eleven-year-old Irene Ford.

Little Irene has been swimming in the upper Potomac three years and has acquired so many water habits that she is more at home in the river than on shore—the pebbles on the beach hurt her feet she says. Tuesday she didn't know anything about saving drowning people, although she knew most of what there is to know about keeping one's wits and swimming. The eleven-year-old told her she could easily tow a heavy man by the hair if she would try it. He permitted her to tow him and she has been practicing it ever since.

Yesterday Lieut. Russell Dean, the District harbor master, the Washington Times motion picture man and Mr. Longfellow called on the Ford at their camp. Longfellow, who weighs about 200 pounds, paddled into the middle of the river in a canoe with little Irene, who weighs about sixty pounds. Out in the channel the men overturned the canoe, and were carried away from it by the current. Irene crawled on the water fern beneath the overturned boat and swam to Longfellow, about ten yards away.

Longfellow then gathered all the bathers in the vicinity about the canoe and demonstrated that an overturned boat of this class is one of the best little life-preservers in the business, as it can support more people upside-down than it can right side up, eight being sustained clinging to the bottom of the boat.

Last night Mr. Longfellow gave an illustrated lecture at the Chamber of Commerce on the water being done by the Federal Government and the American Red Cross in life-saving. Pictures were thrown upon the screen to show how the Federal coast-guard follows its motto, "never give up." Other views were devoted to the development of the volunteer services of the Red Cross.

Mr. Longfellow laid stress upon the need in every city for ample and adequate swimming pools, and declared that Washington's principal need in this direction is an interior swimming pool in order that the public may learn to swim properly in the winter and make use of the knowledge in the summer. The motions so essential to proper swimming, the speaking and the making of the water auditors that they practice dry-land swimming on piano stools.

While speaking to the men, Mr. Longfellow threw upon the screen a picture of an English bathing machine, which was designed, he said, to preclude the bather from the embarrassment of being seen in bathing costume. Such a machine, he added, would not be popular with the women of America, as they would not be so designed "not to be seen."

President P. T. Moran, in thanking Mr. Longfellow for furthering the recent resolution of the Chamber urging better policing of the waters about Washington, said that he proposed to introduce at the next meeting of the Chamber a resolution calling for the establishment of prizes for life-saving work.

NEW STRIKE THREAT IN GARMENT TRADES

New York Unions to Vote on Action to Be Taken If Manufacturers Delay Agreement.

NEW YORK, July 30.—Officials of the garment workers' unions have written to Mayor Mitchell charging him with the part of the manufacturers through what they called deliberate delay in accepting settlement of the trade controversy recommended by the mayor's council of conciliation.

It was also announced that a vote would be taken immediately by the 60,000 members of the unions on the question of a strike on August 1 if the agreement should not be accepted by the manufacturers by that time.

The general executive board of the union met at 32 Union square, and adopted a statement of the situation for distribution among the members, with the request that a vote be taken on the question of a strike or further negotiations. Arrangements were made for taking the vote in ten places here, and in New Jersey tomorrow, Sunday, and Monday. The votes are to be counted Monday night.

Should the vote be in favor of a strike it would affect these workers in the garment trade: Operators, 12,000; finishers, 4,000; skirtnakers, 10,000; pressers, 8,000; sample makers and piece makers, 8,000; cutters, 4,000; reaser makers, 4,000; and buttonhole makers, 1,000.

Julius Henry Cohen, attorney for the Cloak, Suit, and Skirt Manufacturers' Protective Association, said today that he was not permitted to announce the decision of the manufacturers pending the action of the council.

Bayonne Striker Dies of Wound Received in Riot

NEW YORK, July 30.—John Sargun, one of the men shot during the strike riot in front of the Tidewater Oil Company's plant at Bayonne, N. J., last Thursday, is dead today from his wounds. Sargun was a former Austrian soldier, and it was stated at the time that he was leading an attack on the plant when he fell with a shot wound through the abdomen.

Sargun's death is the fourth fatality resulting from the strike disorder.

"Bathtub Slayer" Denied Plea for New Trial

LONDON, July 30.—George Joseph Smith, the "bathtub murderer," convicted and sentenced to death after a trial for killing three wives, was denied a new trial.

The judges of the court of appeals upheld the conviction and overruled the argument of Smith's counsel that no prima facie evidence had been presented at the trial of the man.

Two Youths, Innocent Of Hold-up, Released

After being held in custody all night in connection with the hold-up of Peter Hensch, near the Pennsylvania avenue bridge southeast, Thomas E. Pant, Jr., and Bernard C. Jarboe, each eighteen years old, were released by the police today and the charge against them nolle prossed.

Hensch, who lives in Suitland, Md., confronted the two young men this morning at the District building and could not identify them. To the police they told a straightforward story of their whereabouts Monday night, when the robbery was committed, and convinced the officers of their innocence.

A watch and a small sum of money were secured by the two men who climbed up on his wagon at 2 o'clock in the morning and covered him with a revolver.

EVERY FAT MAN HIS OWN VERNON CASTLE

McGinley Explains How One May Wear Avoirdupois and Class at Once.

NEW YORK, July 30.—Take it from James H. McGinley—McGinley of the Clothing Designers' Association of America—there is no sense at all in the habit that fat, very fat, men have of going around looking as if their wives had thrown their clothes on them. Observation of a few common sense rules in buying clothing and putting it on will make heavyweights of ample girth look as trim and neat as Vern Castle.

Speaking before the second session of the designers' convention Mr. McGinley offered the following cheer to the roly-poly who would be beautiful:

"Don't fall for all the fool stuff you see in the shop windows. The cuts and the trim will be the same, but the fit will be for you. Buy what common sense tells you is suitable for your age and girth. Then put your clothing on in the proper way."

"Most men never get far enough into their coats. The result is that the garment never feels comfortable. It gets pulled out of shape and soon becomes shabby. Then you swear at tailor, clothier, salesman. Here is what you should do:

"Be sure and get your shoulders well into your coat. Then button the coat all the way down, no matter how the weather may be. Wear it that way half a dozen times and it will become molded to your figure. Afterward avoid stuffing the pockets with articles that pull the coat out of shape. Never hang a coat up by the back of a chair. Follow these tips and you will smile at yourself in the mirror."

High Praise for Men Of First Battery, N. G.

High praise for the members of the First Battery, Field Artillery, N. G. D. C., who returned yesterday from ten days of training in the instruction camp at Tobyhanna, Pa., was given by Sergeant Vanderhoof, battery instructor of the regular service, who declared that it was a pleasure to instruct the Washington men.

The ten-day period was devoted to target practice, various maneuvers, and drills, and included a three-day practice march over the mountains, using "traverses" to indicate the flight of the shell.

Capt. Louis C. Vogt was in command of the battery. He was assisted by Lieut. G. G. Wilson and George Bonnett.

Fire in Norfolk Navy Yard Machine Shops

NORFOLK, Va., July 30.—Fire was discovered at 12:45 this morning in one
